THE PARK

Frank Holten State Park is located near the shadow of the St. Louis Gateway Arch, the Gateway to the West. The 1,125-acre park is almost entirely surrounded by East St. Louis.

In 1946 the park was established and named Grand Marais. On May 1, 1967, the name was changed to Frank Holten, in the honor of the late distinguished legislator from East St. Louis. Holten served 48 years in the Illinois General Assembly since his first election in 1916. He died in December, 1966, at the age of 98.

HISTORY

The area around Frank Holten has a variety of early American historical landmarks and Indian lore.

Three state memorials lie to the north of the park; Lewis and Clark, near Wood River; Lovejoy, at Alton; and Governor Coles, at Edwardsville.

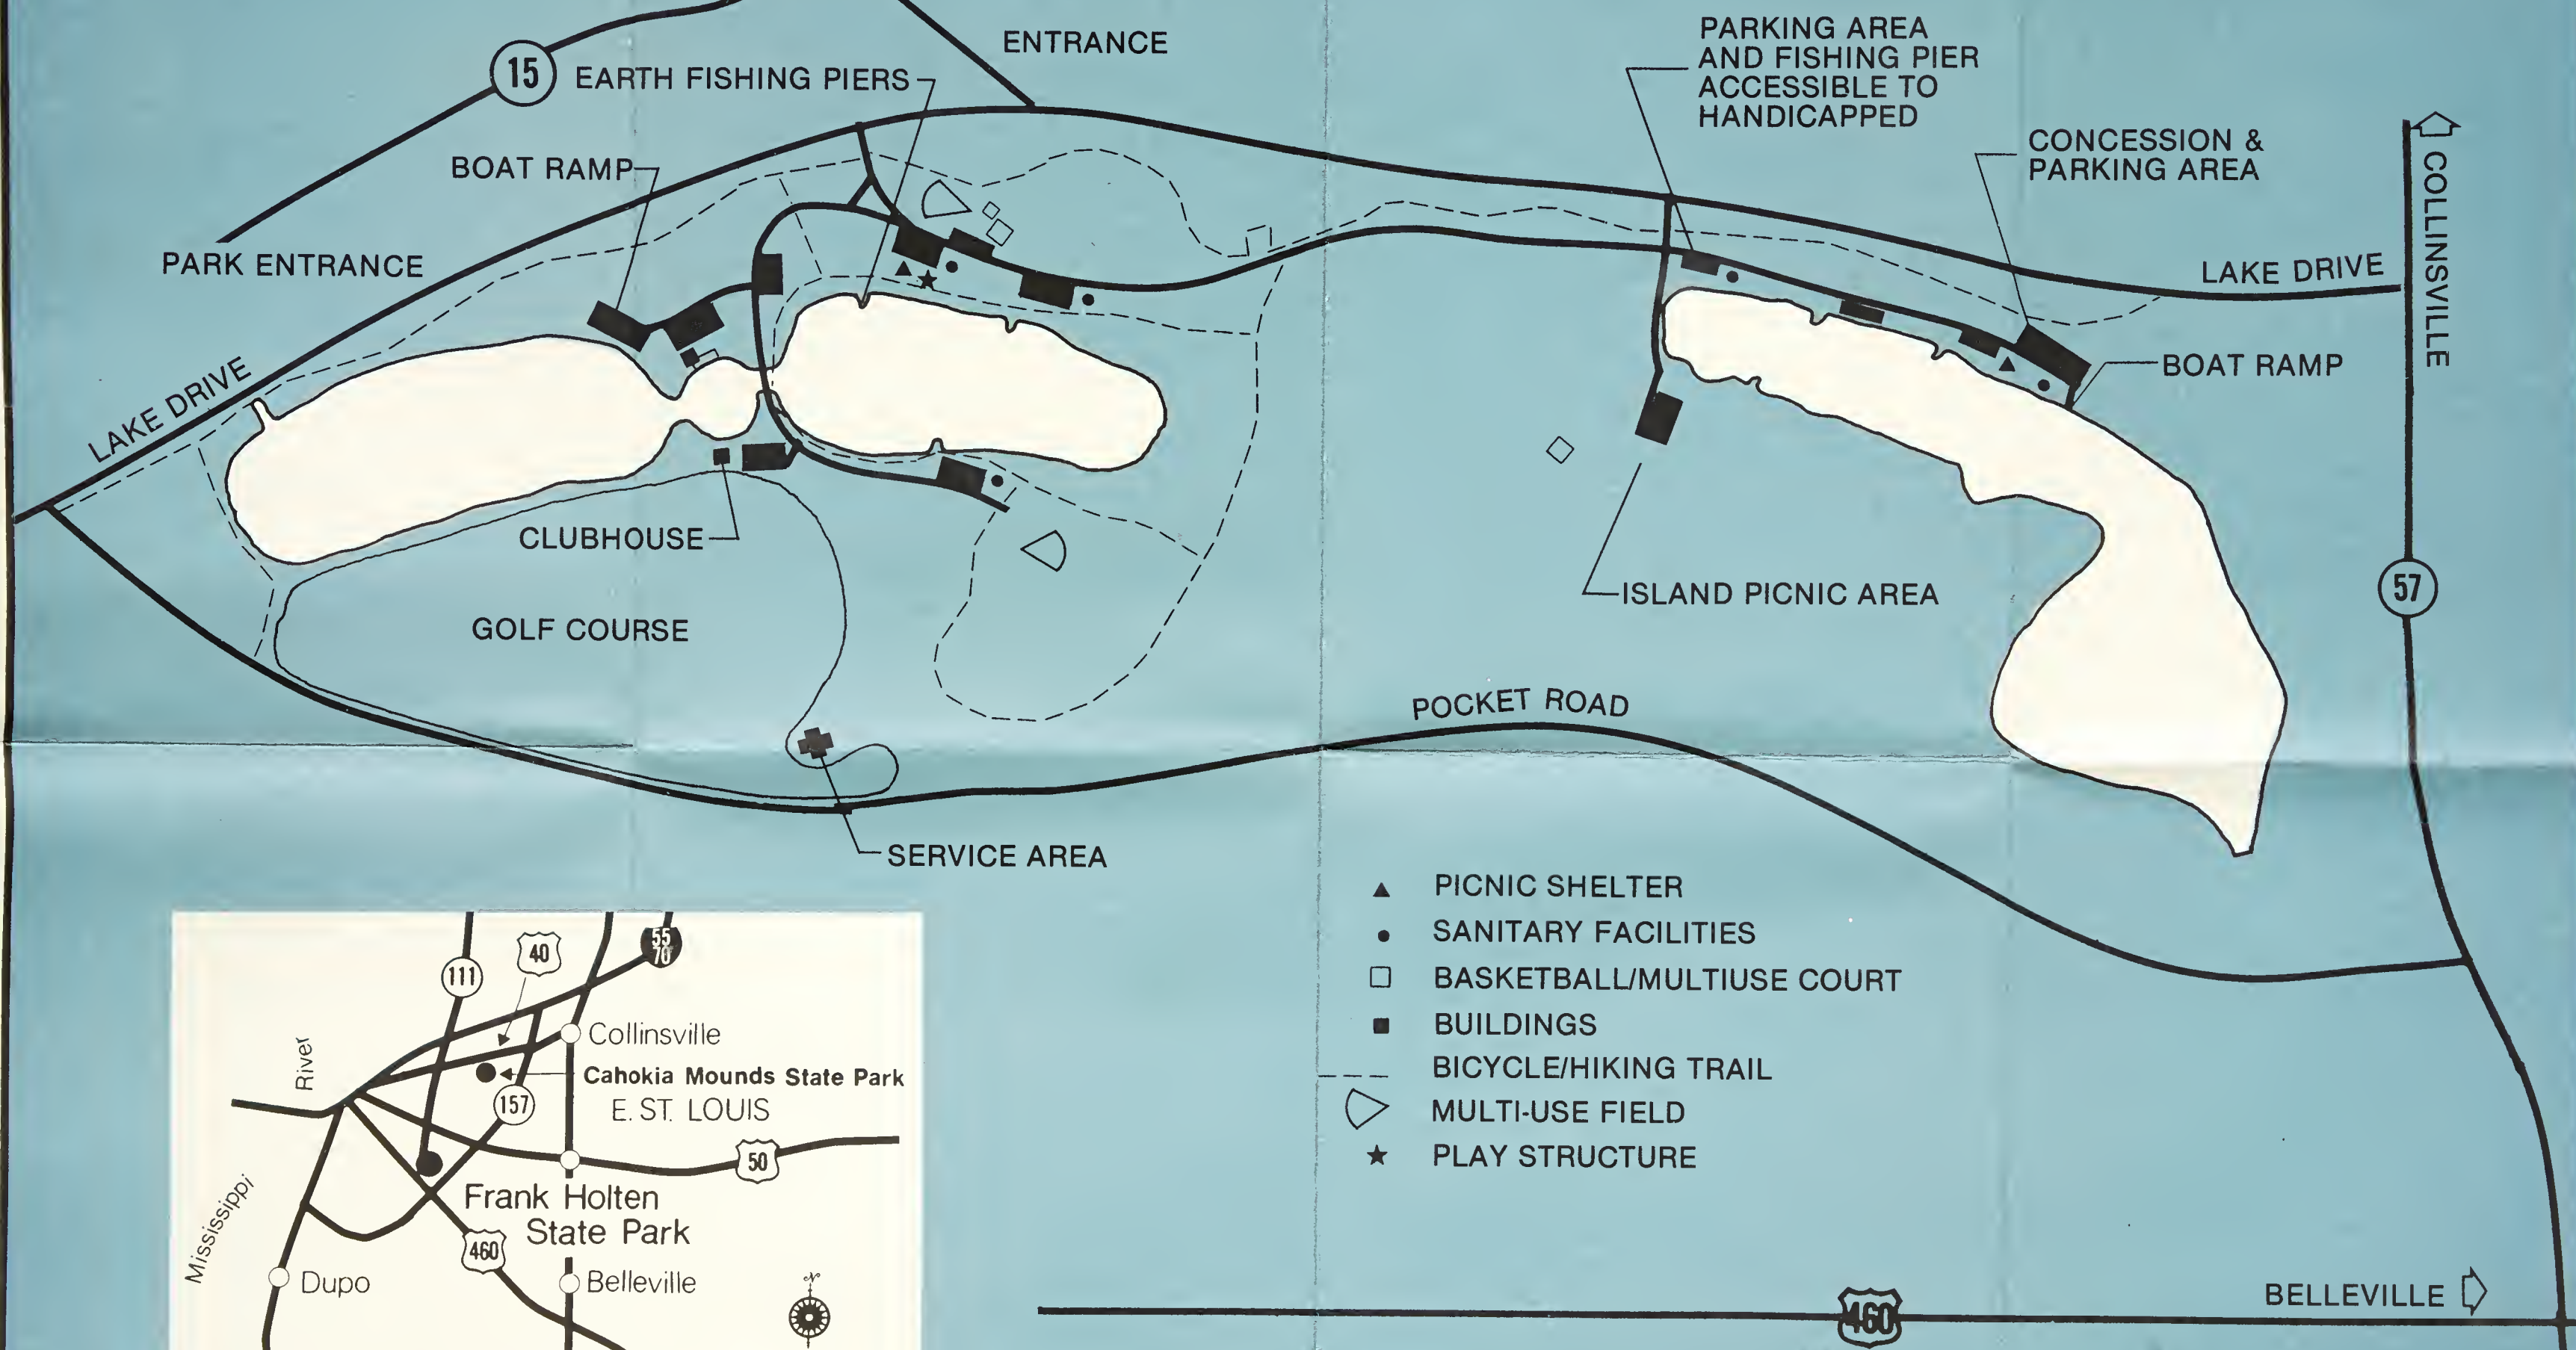

About four miles north are the Indian Mounds at Cahokia Mounds State Park. Probably the earliest inhabitants of this area were the mound building Pre-Columbian Indians who dotted this part of the state with over 200 mounds. The 18 well-preserved earthenworks at Cahokia Mounds State Park constitutes one of the largest such historical landmarks on the North American continent. This was also the site of a settlement of La Trappe monks in 1810.

Evidence of the early French regime is found six miles south of Frank Holten State Park at the town of Cahokia, where the Cahokia Courthouse State Memorial, Old Holy Family church and Jarrott Mansion are preserved.

NATURAL SCENE

The area has a variety of plant and animal life. Shade and decorative trees include Scotch pine, maple, oak, poplar, sycamore, ginkgo, tulip, red bud, sweet gum and wild cherry. Water lily, lilac, arrowhead, bridal wreath, honeysuckle bush and mock orange, are some of the blossoming flowers and bushes. Many common species of animals may be viewed in the park, such as rabbit, squirrel, raccoon, fox, groundhog, muskrat and mink.
